As a citizen of your country, you have certain responsibilities. Of course, there are definitely some things you are required to do by law, such as paying taxes or respecting the property of other people. 55 One example of this is volunteering.

Volunteering simply means being willing to do work or to help others, normally without getting paid for your efforts. It could be as simple as lending a helping hand at a school for a few hours every week or as involved as creating a program to help the homeless.

56 To begin with, volunteering can help you to connect with others. This is especially good if you are new to an area. In fact, volunteering can be so fun that you end up making a whole new set of friends because of it.

Volunteering is also good for your mental and physical health. 57 People who take on volunteer roles tend to be more active, and they often have lower blood pressure.

Finally, volunteering can help you in your profession. You can learn new skills when you volunteer and learn how to work well with others. 58

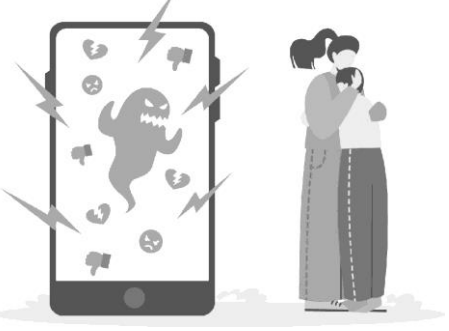

So, if you want to be a good citizen, don't be reluctant to give volunteering a try. Even though you won't get paid, you will make a difference in people's lives.

- (A) Volunteering can benefit people in many ways, especially in their daily lives.
- (B) However, there are other things that you can do that are not required by law but can help to make your country a lot better.
- (C) In addition, you often meet new people when you volunteer, and some of these people may become important business contacts.
